000 from Cotton Men.

Edward Griffith, a dealer in diamonds, filed suit yesterday in the Supreme Court, sgainst Walter C. Hicks, Allan Bond and Thomas Flaherty, members of the Cotton Exchange, demanding from them an aggregate of $100,000 damages for slander. One action against Hicks is based on the alleged statement made at the Cotton Exchange, June 15, 1914, that "Griffith deals in stolen diamonds, selling them at 40 or 50 per cent of their value." For this Griffith asks $25,000, while he sues for a similar amount for this alleged statement by Hicks: "Griffith has been a runner for a gambling house and has taken me there to gamble."

Would Change Conservation Scheme.

A board of twelve members, to be vested with discretionary powers relative to the state's future conservation policy, would be created by a proposed amendment introduced in the Constitution Convention by Ferris J. Meigs, of Tupper Lake.

"The policy now in force and followed since the adontion of the present constitution," said Mr. Meigs, "has increased the ownership of the state in forest lands, has increased the timber and preserved it from spoliation, but has discouraged the use of lands by camping parties, has prevented the building of many roads and has permitted heavy waste."

The proposal provides for constitutional safeguards for the forest preserve, but would permit the conservation board to direct the state policy as to disposition of waterpower, second growth and dead timber and reforestand members would be

Italia Irredenta

Whether Italy's entrance into the War was an act of "unparalleled perfidy," as Emperor Francis Joseph proclaims it, or whether it was justified and made unavoidable by a policy of treaty-breaking and temporizing on the part of her former ally Austria, is a question that drops into the background because of the more important one that is in many minds: Can Italy's army and navy turn the scale of battle and bring the war to an end in favor of the Allies?

In THE LITERARY DIGEST for June 5th, Italy's position as viewed from every angle by leading newspapers of America and Europe is shown, also

A Fine Map of the Austro-Italian Boundary, Across Which the Italian Army Is Striking

The consensus of American newspaper opinion seems to hold that Germany's reply to President Wilson's protest is evasive, and in some quarters there is grave apprehension that it presages a stand on Germany's part which may draw the United States into war. In this grave crisis the war news presentation in THE LITERARY DIGEST will be appreciated by all thoughtful people, giving, as it does, without animus, and without distortion, every feature as it arises.

The wide scope of the contents of THE LITERARY DIGEST in the issue of June 5th is shown by the following interesting subjects fully covered, and illustrated with striking maps, photographs, and cartoons:

Italy's Moral Position America Unready The Americas for Americans Rooseveltian Language Upheld How Europe Views Italy's Act Britain Swaps Horses in Midstream Starving Germany Sacrament Before Fighting Galicia's Vanishing Church
